Death is the permanent cessation of all biological functions that sustain a living organism. Phenomena which commonly bring about death include aging, predation, malnutrition, disease, suicide, homicide, starvation, dehydration, and accidents or major trauma resulting in terminal injury. In most cases, bodies of living organisms begin to decompose shortly after death.

It's worth mentioning that, as always, it is both nature and nurture (and maybe more accurately, it is the intersection of the two, the same gene can have different effects in different environments). If you want a very detailed explanation (like, first semester at Stanford detailed), look at professor Sapolski's lecture on human behavioral biology. He goes in great details about how the two ...
