Organic Chemistry Janice Gorzynski Smith

The Dieckmann condensation is the intramolecular chemical reaction of diesters with base to give β -keto esters. It is named after the German chemist Walter Dieckmann (1869–1925). The equivalent intermolecular reaction is the Claisen condensation.

In a molecule, a stereocenter is a particular instance of a stereogenic element that is geometrically a point. A stereocenter or stereogenic center is any point in a molecule, though not necessarily an atom, bearing groups, such that an interchanging of any two groups leads to a stereoisomer. The term stereocenter was introduced in 1984 by Kurt Mislow and Jay Siegel.
